Many South Africans are unable to earn an income due to the pandemic, with those in the hospitality and entertainment industries hit the hardest due to the imposed Level 4 lockdown.

Mediamark, East Coast Radio, Jacaranda FM and Smile 90.4FM have teamed up with Lottoland to lend a helping hand to those who cannot earn an income during lockdown. Each station will fill their 'Tip Jar' with a share of R300,000, resulting in a collective R900,000 in aid for the people who keep these industries afloat.

The financial assistance will help staff who work in industries such as hospitality, entertainment, performing arts, eventing and the local cleaning industry – these industries are hit the hardest by alcohol bans and public gathering prohibitions.

Everyone is encouraged to nominate someone in need of financial help by sharing the person's plight on the stations' websites.

Boni Mchunu, East Coast Radio's managing director, adds: "After the announcement of the nationwide lockdown Level 4, we knew that certain sectors would be greatly affected. As a station that cares for our communities the 'Tip Jar' campaign allows us to do purposeful work and reach out to audiences so that they know they always have a companion in radio."

"We all know someone in these industries or enjoyed their service before Covid-19 hit – they are very much part of our community and our listeners expect us to show us when our community is in need. We do so proudly. Not only is our assistance critical for their survival, but the survival of our deep and rich culture fuelled by art, culture, music, event and the restaurant industry," says Deirdre King, managing director at Jacaranda FM.
