

The reason African Lions is a critical research study for Africa

 By Louise Marsland

29 Aug 2017

The groundbreaking African Lions study to ascertain the true size and sustainability of Africa's middle class was undertaken by Ipsos with the UCT Unilever Institute over an 18 month period, to define once and for all Africa's elusive middle class, the annual PAMRO 2017 conference in Cape Town, heard.

© Daniel Ernst via 123RF

"We had the 10 golden years of 'Africa Rising'," recounted Nanzala Mwaura, director Connect, Ipsos SA, where a growing African middle class was expected to drive double digit growth and spark infrastructure development. One in three Africans were defined as middle class.

"Then came the period of economic downturn... what really happened was that there was a slowdown in commodity products; and new narratives about [previously] overestimating the African middle class. That sparked the thinking for this study."

The typical notion of the middle class is that they are financially secure, own their own homes, live in nuclear families, own a car, are educated, have access to services, access to brands and are modern. These definitions don't apply when defining the middle class across the continent.

“That was why we wanted to do this study and get to the bottom of it and look at it from the consumer point of view,” Mwaura told the Pamro audience, on day one of #Pamro2017.

The research has already been presented in roadshows across South Africa and Mwaura was unpacking the methodology and reasoning for the researchers and marketers in the room.

How to market to Africa's resilient, ambitious middle class

Louise Marsland 22 May 2017

The study was done over 18 months, in nine countries, with 150 researchers, 150 video interviews, involved 30 focus groups and 7,500 interviewees who were asked 565 questions in 100 video interviews, which generated 300 hours of video footage.

“We asked the question: ‘Who is the middle class of Africa?’ These are the people you are trying to sell something to. We did the research and then defined the market.”

To find and define the market, people earning less than $2 a day were excluded, as were those who were vulnerable and at risk of slipping back into poverty. However, there were variables, explained Mwaura, and those who spent more than 75% of income on utilities were out, as well as those earning more than $70 dollars per day. Slums were included in the survey.

But, a dollar amount alone does not a middle class make, reiterated Mwaura, and elements such as attitudes towards money, debt, financial support, tradition, brands, nutrition, aspirations, faith and family were all taken into account.

“

There are over 100 million African Lions, with a total spending power of R1.3 trillion.

”

The middle class in Africa (excluding South Africa which has a far more developed economy) has now been defined as:

- Earning over $4 per day.
- Has disposable income.
- Employed, run a business or are studying.
- Made it to secondary school.
- Earning under $70 per day.

An average of 60% of Africans in cities fall into the middle class, but because Africa is not a country, the numbers do vary city by city.

The final conclusion, providing numbers much sought after by researchers across the continent, is that there are over 100 million African Lions, with a total spending power of over $400 million (R1.3 trillion). This is good news for marketers.

And even better news for the continent’s future, is that Africa’s middle class is positive, striving, surviving, aspirational, hustlers. Faith and tradition are important and they have access to brands, but are also proud of traditions and culture.

They are defined as: “Vulnerable, Comfortable, Accomplished”.

VULNERABLE:

43% of the middle class

34% formal employment

34% self-employed

$16.30 average household income per day

- Most financially burdened.
- Highest debt levels.
- Least stable income but still saves for emergencies.
- Still able to support others.
- High expenditure on education and medical expenses.

COMFORTABLE:

25% of the middle class

32% formal employment

31% self-employed

$15.70 average household income per day

- Younger (<27).
- Single.
- Not responsible for households.
- Less likely to provide financial support to family.
- Less likely to put aside money for emergencies.

ACCOMPLISHED:

32% of the middle class

45% are in formal employment

27% are self-employed

$19 average household income per day

- Tertiary education in progress or completed.
- Have money for emergencies.
- Can afford more than food and clothing.
- Greater stability in employment and income.
- Low debt.
- Access to email/internet/personal computer.

ABOUT LOUISE MARSLAND

Louise Burgers (previously Marsland) is Founder/Content Director: SOURCE Content Marketing Agency. Louise is a Writer, Publisher, Editor, Content Strategist, Content/Media Trainer. She has written about consumer trends, brands, branding, media, marketing and the advertising communications industry in SA and across Africa, for over 20 years, notably, as previous Africa Editor: Bizcommunity.com; Editor: Bizcommunity Media/Marketing SA; Editor-in-Chief: AdVantage magazine; Editor: Marketing Mix magazine; Editor: Progressive Retailing magazine; Editor: BusinessBrief magazine; Editor: FMCG Files newsletter. Web: www.sourceagency.co.za.

- Teaching trade: the importance of empowering the female entrepreneur - 17 Dec 2019
- New monetisation models for media are needed - 16 Dec 2019
- #AfricaCom: The many VOD markets - 25 Nov 2019
- #AfricaCom: TV content future will be shaped by OTT - 20 Nov 2019
- Africa's growth rests on economic empowerment of women - 1 Nov 2019

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>